

Qualified European Patent Attorney
Life Sciences & Chemistry Team – Chemistry

About Us

Kilburn & Strode is one of Europe's leading firms of patent and trade mark attorneys. We hire the best people and we do excellent work for some of the most innovative organisations in the world, including Honeywell, Takeda, Amgen, Janssen, Boeing, and LG.

We deal with all aspects of patents, trademarks and designs. We work for a broad range of clients from major international corporations through to individual inventors – we're often at the forefront of cutting-edge innovations.

London is our international headquarters. We also have offices in Hilversum, Munich, The Hague and San Francisco – and we collaborate across offices to give our clients the best service. We truly understand our clients' points-of-view to give them an excellent experience, but we work hard to create a friendly and innovative culture where like-minded people want to work.

We know that our reputation as a firm is based entirely on the quality of the individuals who work here. That's why we've always been uncompromising in seeking out people who are not only at the top of their game, but who also share our enthusiasm and outlook.

The Opportunity

This is a fantastic opportunity for a fully qualified European patent attorney with at least three years post-qualification experience. Preferably, we would also like either a Dutch or a UK qualification. This need arises from a growing workload in the chemistry team. You should be open to working across a wide range of chemical technologies, on both contentious and non-contentious matters. There will also be opportunities for developing your own client base. You will be supported and helped to grow in this role, as necessary, by a close team of expert practitioners.

The successful candidate must be commercially-minded, detail-focused, self-motivated, with excellent communication and interpersonal skills. The ability to work closely with direct clients is essential. At Kilburn & Strode we are committed to providing excellent training for our trainee patent attorneys, and the successful candidate should be prepared to contribute fully to our training process.
